To Look Within Means to Look inside The Bigger picture and evaluate the emotions, and meaning of the Situation. And where each side is coming from, and to get a better understanding.

Martin Luther King was a social activist he was a hero that stood up for what was right and didn't give up until he had justice for African Americans. Martin Luther King worked with ~~political~~ different civil rights groups to organize jobs and political rallies. This shows how Martin had to decide what was right in order for there to be peace and a way for African Americans to have some kind of stability. But while he was making all these decisions and setting up all these events and speeches he had to look within himself and decide whether he was making the right choice for African Americans.

Also Rosa Parks was a civil rights leader who stood up for what was right. During Rosa's childhood she was faced with racial discrimination and activism for racial equality. Rosa Parks was a strong woman and an inspiration to a lot of African Americans.

~~When she graduated high school she was part of the Civil Rights issues and then joined the Youth Center and Secretary to NAACP president E. D. Nixon. When she made that decision to not give her seat that took a lot of looking within herself because she had to think about the consequences after she did that. And when she made that decision she was rested, but the decision she made she knew it is right because she was standing up for herself.~~

To conclude these are my reasoning on how Martin Luther King and Rosa Parks had to look within their self and make hard decisions.
